1. In the course of a committee meeting shortly after the convocation of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC), TAN Kah Kee advocated the abrogation and revision of the Sino-Soviet treaties. He stated that China should and must be free from all foreign imperialists, of whatever kind. Non-Communist committee members all spoke in support of this view, expressing their sentiments with some degree of violence.
2. TAN then accused the USSR of robbing the Chinese people by pillaging Manchurian industry at the end of the war. A Chinese Communist committee member answered this charge by saying that the Soviets had taken Manchurian industrial equipment only to save it from "bandit CHIANG Kai-shek," and that it had all been stored in Siberia and was in the process of being returned; CPPCC delegates who so desired could go to Manchuria and determine the truth of the matter for themselves.
